GLEN CARBON, PA., February 1 .- The wives and daughters of the striking min-ers attacked the "scabs" or non-union men who went to work in the Reading Company's Glendower colliery yesterday.

About seventy-five excited women, each carrying a loaf of bread, met the men as they came out of the mines. One young woman advanced and read an address to the frightened men about the shame of taking the places of their husbands and brothers, and of offering to share their last crust with them. They then offered the loaves, which were refused. The women then hurled the loaves upon the heads of the "scabs," used opprobrious epithets, and chased them pell-mell to the miners' train, which took the scared men out of the reach of the infuriated the strike.
